

Answer on question #60818 – Chemistry – Organic Chemistry

Peptide linkage is the bond by which two amino acids are linked together. Basically, it is a condensation reaction releasing a molecule of water when the carboxyl group of one amino acid interacts with the amino group of another amino acid. The energy for formation of the peptide bond is derived from ATP hydrolysis. Here is an image for better understanding.

