

While most governments have been trying to prevent high rates of inflation, the level of unemployment had risen according to Philips' curve. It means that company fired a lot of people. So trying to keep the level of profits at the same level, companies were forced to upgrade equipment and to train personnel. As a result potential output because of these actions have risen and supply curve moved to higher position.

