

Answer on Question#37182 - Economics - Macroeconomics

The unemployment rate declines, while the number of employed workers also decline. It's false, because if the number of workers employed decline, the employment rate also decline, so the unemployment rate increases, as the number of unemployed is the same.