

Answer on Question #37826 – Economics – Macroeconomics

Since the balance of payment is based upon system of double-entry book-keeping, the total debits must equal total credits. This is because two aspects of each transaction recorded are equal in amount but appear on opposite sides of the balance of payments account.

In this accounting sense, balances of payments for a country must always balance.