

QUESTION:

How can a satellite's speed decrease without its angular momentum changing?

SOLUTION:

Since angular momentum is

$$\vec{L} = \vec{r} \times (m\vec{v})$$

We can decrease a satellite's speed by increasing its mass, or increasing its distance from the planet

ANSWER:

We can decrease a satellite's speed by increasing its mass, or increasing its distance from the planet