

Answer on Question #45560, Physics, Electromagnetism

the net charge in a current carrying wire is zero . then why does a magnetic field exert a force on it .

Solution

That is because the magnetic field acts not on static charges but on currents, or, the same - moving charges. It will act, if there is motion of charge in the wire, even if total charge does not change.