

Answer on question #51920, Physics, Field Theory

Question Anytime a temperature difference occurs, you can expect cold to move to where it is warmer.

energy movement from higher temperature regions

no energy movement unless it is warm enough, at least above the freezing temperature energy movement flowing slowly from cold to warmer regions.

Solution Anytime a temperature difference occurs, you can expect energy movement from higher temperature regions