Answer on Question #59662-Physics-Other

Which stage of the software development lifecycle is aimed at determining the kind of information that will be required by system users?

a) feasibility study

b) user requirement analysis

c) design of new system

d) analysis of the old system

Answer: b) user requirement analysis.

Following are the different phases of system development life cycle:

User requirement analysis is aimed at determining the kind of information that will be required by system users.